A sacrifice moved them up, but "Slim" got Baker on a foul and on a pop to Welter. In fact, fourteen of the visitors went down on por erned, it was not so much that the Yankee pitchers were good, but that the Athletics were worse. Roy Fisher, the Vermont pedagogue, started the contest, and after working his usual six innings disappeared, carrying with him the well vishes of the crowd and marks of battle Had he been allowed to linger on the rubber there is no way of telling just shat might have happened. Nine and four runs were made off Fisher. Keating replaced him, finishing the seventh inning, and then Caldwell, in the eighth inning, struck out the side. The highly touted Bob Shawkey went into the first game, but he remained for short while only. Three hits and a base on balls, productive of a brace of runs, released him from bondage, and Leo Houck, the Lancaster bear cat, was disnatched with orders to Houck's delivery was tapped for five perfectly useful safe hits, and an additional three runs were rushed home. Neither Carrol Brown nor Joe Bush had anything stock that puzzled beyond reason in the final game, and both were hit freely. J. Franklin Baker qualified beyond all question for a place on the all-America Errors Play a Big Part in Debonehead team in the final game by chasing Harry Wolter over the plate when a throw to Schang would have caught him. levity ceased for a moment. Right then, however, Hartzell hit to shortstop and Wolter started for the plate. Barry threw home and Wolter doubled back and forth. Baker took a throw in the running up game and darted in pursuit of Wolter, who lit for the plate.

It was a nice race, with the betting even. Down the lines they sped. At the home plate Schang called for the ball: Throw it here, Frank; throw it here!" but never a throw from Baker. He could best Wolter; he knew he could; and he would if he had to run a block. But he didn't, and Wolter scored while the crowd laughed approval. The incident recalled the famous "Tug" Arundel-"Piggy" Ward chase, when Arundel ran Ward all around the bases after dropping a third strike, the latter winning the race and scoring the run which won the game for his team. Celebrate the Battle of Long Island by Handing Double-Header to Boston.

BRAVES HAVE BATTING BEE

Brooklyn Helps by a Total of Eleven Errors, and in Last Inning of Second Game Gets Her Only Run.

The battle of Long Island was cele-brated yesterday at Ebbets Field by what Charite Ebbets advertised as two ball games. The Brooklyn Superbas invited the Boston Braves, who from time immemorial have been noted as great men in the history of our United States, to participate in the celebration. The Braves surely have an intimate knowledge of the data of the celebration, for they were the ntire show throughout the afternoon They celebrated the great battle all by themselves by trouncing the Superbas in both ends of the double-header.

The opening game, if it may be called a game, proved a farce, so far as the Superbas were concerned. The Braves just simply hit and hit and hit until they were so tired they were forced to rest when they had amassed the small total of thirteen runs. The Braves won by a score of 13 to 0. In the second game the Superbas were unable to come back, and again took the small end of the score. This time the Bostonians won 6 to 1. The Superbas did not score a run during the afternoon until the last inning of the second game. The double delcat at the hands of George Stalling's men pulls the Superbas down to a tie for fifth place with their con-

The first game was a repetition of the Boston massacre. The Brayes connected or a bevy of hits in the first three innings which resulted in eight runs, and sent both Allen and Wagner to cover. In the last innings "Hassen" Pfeffer, the new twirler, held the Braves to six hits and five runs. George Tyler held the home team hitless for the first six frames and allowed the Superbas only three safetles during the remainder of the fray, two of which were garnered by Bill Co There was nothing in the playing of the nome team which indicated that they were interested in the fray. Bob Fisher was a wonder at making errors. His work for the first game consisted in fielding no less than seven chances. Bob exhibited his great skill in the national pastime by making four marvellous slips All of his misplays resulted disastrously for Brooklyn. The rest of the team fried hard to soothe Fisher and, incidentally, prevent him from monopolizing all the oor playing. In the first game the entire team made seven errors, while in the second farce comedy they added four more to their count, giving them a grand total of eleven errors in one day. This is probably more afternoon for a number of years.

When the first game was over the celebration ceremonies started. They consisted of a parade from the plate to the flag pole, where a detachment of soldiers from Fort Hamilton and a squad of sailors from the navy yard raised the flag presented to the Brooklyn Baseball Club in honor of the occasion.

In the nightcap the Braves continued to slaughter the Superbas' twirlers and connected for twelve hits. Ed. Reuibach Athletics' Veteran Twirler Has
